

Welcome Nicholas Jitkoff, VP of Design

February 17, 2017

Todd Jackson February 7, 2017

We're thrilled to announce that Nicholas Jitkoff is joining Dropbox as our VP of Design! Nicholas joins us from Google where he led the work of the Material Design team, iterating with product groups across the company to create a coherent design language for Google's suite of products. He's strongly multidisciplinary, working in close collaboration with the marketing and search teams to define and deploy initiatives like Google's new brand system. And he's passionate about enabling productivity, from being an active Dropbox user since our inception to having developed the beloved Mac app Quicksilver.

Design has always been at the heart of Dropbox, tying our products together and solving fundamental problems that impact the lives of millions of people around the world. Working closely with our Engineering and Product teams, Nicholas will lead our Design team in defining their vision for Dropbox. He'll also help us continue to grow our diverse and talented teams across Design Research, Product Design, Brand Design, and UX Writing. We look forward to Nicholas's leadership in taking our design identity to new heights.

Welcome, Nicholas!